Aloha from Aloha Hell.

Many of you have recently experienced extreme weather for your locale. Snow where it normally doesn't fall; Unseasonably warm temperatures; Heavy rains; Severe winds.

We don't feel bad. I've been here on the Island of Oahu in Hawaii for the past week, and we've had extreme weather here all week - extremely gorgeous weather.

Unfortunately I was working through it all, except for about two hours today.

These photos were taken at Sand Island, a small piece of land off the edge of Honolulu. In the nineteenth century, it was called Quarantine Island, because it was used to anchor ships that were suspected of carrying diseases. During WWII, it was used as an internment camp for Japanese-American, Italian & German people.

Today it's mostly used for container shipping piers & storage, but some of it is a park.

Cheers,
G.
