Hello from the club at SEATAC Airport in Seattle.

Just a short trip, not much time to take pictures, and the weather hasn't been cooperative.

It was a nearly full moon last night and the clouds were breaking up, so I went out to try to get some moonlit mountains (been trying for years to get moonlit mountains). I had to break the law by going into a closed waterside park in Seabeck, Washington to get the Olympic Mountains. But when I was poised in a good location, the clouds were not (see the Imagine...jpg – it is a 60 second exposure). So I had to settle for something less.

Silverdale, Washington sits at the North edge of Dyes Inlet, in the Puget Sound area. I caught a glimpse of the town lights while on a highway, so I decided to try to find a location where I could get a clear shot. I found a little park and once again daringly broke the law (the park is only open in daylight) and scurried down to the waterfront to snap some shots.

Hope you all have a Happy Holiday Season.

Cheers,
G.
