Yesterday's video seemed to be popular, so here is today's return trip.

The good news is that I slowed it down to just twice the speed of sound by recording one frame every two seconds. That's a 30:1 time compression.

The bad news is that it's twice as long, and twice the size. But for those of you who were looking for familiar sights, it'll be easier.

This time I crossed the Hudson River further North on the Tappan Zee Bridge, to avoid what was undoubtedly going to be a congested situation around the George Washington Bridge (see map for route comparison).
